The drums beat and the procession is preceded by a gorgeously attired usher, who announces, "Monsieur le president." Other ushers or policemen in times of excitement form a double line to keep the passage clear.

Thus escorted, the president mounts to his seat, high above the tribune from which the members speak, and immediately there is a noise of members scrambling to their seats, like schooloys afraid of being marked late. This part of the proceedings is about as undignified as the entrance of the president is imposing. After tapping his desk with a large paper knife, or, in case of much noise, ringing a brase bell, the president declares the sitting open, and a relative silence is estab ished for a moment. The formal business of reading the minutes of the last sitting is gone through, and then the discussion upon the question of the day begins.
